I Sell Life Insurance Because...

Last year, Minnesota Life paid over $157 million in individual life insurance death benefits. This is not just some number relating to the balance sheet of the annual report. It's more than that. The 2,299 policyholders who passed away in 2005 left behind someone who counted on them for support, and Minnesota Life delivered 2,299 checks.

Those checks paid rents and mortgages. Those checks sent children to college, bought their books, paid their room and board. Those checks paid off credit card bills, utility bills and car loans. Those checks fixed leaky roofs on aging houses. Those checks went to charities that provide food and shelter for the homeless, playground equipment for day care facilities, and hot meals for the elderly. Those checks provided choices, options and control over the daunting challenges in overcoming the loss of a provider. Those checks meant peace of mind for 2,299 beneficiaries. I sell life insurance because it makes a difference.
